

Whānau and partnerships.
Both as important as each other. And both making stars out of AUT's Māori graduates.

Julian Wilcox is a lecturer in Māori Media at AUT. What makes him so compelling as a lecturer is that Julian lives what he teaches, having an extensive background in all aspects of Māori Media. Just the sort of person whose brains you should pick to find out more about the issues, the future and the importance of Māori in the media.

At Te Ara Poutama, the Faculty of Māori Development, we enlist the help of New Zealand's key Māori media figures to work with our students to give them an insider's perspective on the industry and the opportunity to exercise their developing skill set and achieve their career goals. And it really works. Most of our graduates walk straight into employment.

If you can see yourself working in the exciting world of Māori Media – then contact the whānau at Te Ara Poutama.
